ABSTRACT

Street children are children who spend most of their time earning a living/wandering around on the streets or other public places. Street children are a social phenomenon in the city of Banda Aceh that needs serious attention from various parties, especially the government, as regulated in the provisions of Law Number 35 of 2014 concerning Child Protection and Qanun No. 11 of 2008 concerning child protection, Article 8 states that the Aceh government and Regency/city governments are obliged to provide attention, coaching, guidance, supervision, assistance and protection to religious education. This research aims first, to find out whether the efforts made have been effective. Second, to find out how effective legal protection is for street children in Banda Aceh City. This research is a type of empirical juridical research where primary data becomes a research reference in answering several research problems. The results of the research show that first, the efforts of the Social Service are, namely, conducting outreach through talk shows, newspapers, RRI and appealing to cafes, and the Social Service also holds street children control operations (Raids) every month, in collaboration with other institutions, namely Satpol-PP . Second, the implementation of Qanun No. 11 of 2008 concerning Child Protection in protecting the rights of street children is less effective, this can be seen from the increase in the number of street children every year.
